This is starting to sound a bit repetitive.

San Antonio's Imagine Homes has won another national green building award. I have lost count of how many it has at this point, but it is a bunch.

This time, Imagine was one of 12 U.S. builders honored with the Silver Energy Value Housing Award from the National Association of Home Builders Research Center in Orlando. The award is for builders who voluntarily incorporate energy efficiency into all aspects of their home construction.

Imagine certifies all of its homes through the Build San Antonio Green, Energy Star and U.S. Department of Energy's Builders Challenge programs.

Their standard home is 30 percent more efficient than code, and they are now offering options for homebuyers to bump that level up to 40 percent.

A few of their homes are 50 percent more efficient than code.

"This recognition reinforces our commitment to our homeowners to build homes of value that save money on utilities, promote comfort and provide improved indoor air quality," said Imagine Homes partner Jim Bastoni, in a prepared release.

Congratulations!
